UPDATE

30. November 2020

Dear Backers

We apologize for not replying to your enquiry in time, as we were busy assembling the 3D Printers. The first 50 Printers are almost done and will be shipped out soon. We'll keep updating with more information. Once again, thank you for your support.

Best regards

I've waited for months to receive rewards from some projects I've backed, I'm more concerned with the final product than the speed of production, otherwise, I could buy something that is already on the market. The projects that took longer were presented better and had fewer issues than those that are rushed.

Projects can take much longer than anticipated and harassing the creator instead of being patient isn't going to get it finished faster. If you decide to trust a creator, then trust them, if you aren't going to trust them then this isn't the place for you..

Since the last update we have not heard anything at all... very unsettling and I'll be thinking about backing any other Kickstarter twice next time.....

I was due to receive my printer by November and, having not received it, I wrote to the creator on November 9, that he didn't even bother to answer me. Now Christmas is over and I doubt I'll ever get a reply, printer or refund. It is very sad to see how a very useful platform for men of good will can be muddled by people of few scruples. Kickstarter.com should create development stages for projects and submit these to backers in order to avoid scams.

If by a f&€& miracle this project comes to an end, i have to say its probably the worst conducted project i have ever seen....unfortunately im pretty sure we got scammed by the creator and by KS and its a no go....

These are just some steel covers. If you have finished machines for packing, why wouldn't you photograph them???

Considering the time for parts procurement, it is a pace of one unit a day. 500 days left.

I am glad you guys didn't completely vanish. I had kind of gotten discouraged and figured I could kiss that money goodbye.
